

GEORGIA REPUBLICANS: DIVIDED OVER TRUMP, THE BIG LIE, AND HARASSMENT OF ELECTION WORKERS

From June 22-24, we asked Republicans in Georgia about their view of former President Trump, claims about election fraud, and harassment of local election officials. Here's what we found:

53% of Republicans say they're more loyal to the Republican Party than to former President Trump. Just 25% put Trump above the Party and 22% say they're equally loyal to both. Younger Republicans were twice as likely as older Republicans to say they were more loyal to Trump than to the GOP (41% of those under age 45 vs 20% of those 45 and older).

A plurality of Georgia Republicans believes the "Big Lie." 46% of respondents say most Republicans believe voter fraud cost Donald Trump the election, while just 30% say most Georgia Republicans don't actually believe the Big Lie but will go along with the rhetoric because it energizes the base. Men were likelier than women to say they don't believe their fellow Republicans actually believe the Big Lie (37% vs 25% of women).

Note: We asked these voters whether they thought their fellow Republicans believed the election fraud charge, not whether they themselves embraced the Big Lie. This language helps to mitigate partisan tendencies to parrot the GOP talking points and instead, gets us closer to their actual beliefs.

44% say fellow Republicans agree that harassment and threats toward election officials by Trump supporters goes too far but that 29% believe that this behavior just comes with the job. Republicans told us that 80% of those who believe in the Big Lie accept the legitimacy of this intimidation. For those Republicans who don't believe fraud cost Trump the election, 24% sanction the harassment.
