Amazing Blades Landscaping

May flowers wouldn't be possible without April showers and irrigation.

Whether you are on the market for an irrigation system or you have one but have not had it serviced, we are here to help.

What are some benefits of having an irrigation system?

Call us today to get an estimate for an irrigation installation if you do not have one or for an estimate for a maintenance program for the one you already have. We have irrigation service packages available for all of your irrigation needs, from starting the system up in the spring, to shutting it down in the fall and everything in between.

Drought stress

If South Carolina is your “second home”, you definitely need an irrigation system. When you are not here, you can still run and control the system from the click of a button on your phone. This ensures your yard is getting the proper watering it needs to sustain the hot, southern summers.

Drought stress occurs when warm season grasses are actively growing but rainfall and irrigation do not meet the plant’s water requirements. The grass enters a drought-induced dormancy to protect itself. Signs of drought stress include thinning of the grass and a loss of color.

Some helpful hints...

- Rapid evaporation makes watering in the middle of the day wasteful
- The best time to water grass is in the early morning
- Wind and heat are typically minimal at this time, therefore, the majority of the water will reach the lawn
