

OPEC+ & Oil: Lesser Evils & Lower Yields?

“The probability lies in that direction.” – Sherlock Holmes, The Hound of Baskervilles

In a Nutshell:

- A surprisingly large bump up in OPEC+ supply restoration, dragging crude prices, is ostensibly at odds with OPEC+'s desire for price support. But it is consistent with the broader interests of the OPEC+.
- Most prominently, averting further and irrevocable loss of market share to non-OPEC competition, led by aggressive US energy dominance ambitions (looking to pump 3MBpD more).
- Moreover, the strategic importance of aligning with Trump's call for a “cut in Oil prices” also features conspicuously.
- Furthermore, geo-political calculus that involves compensating for Iran's output, to facilitate a policy of “maximum pressure”/sanctions on Iran.
- Finally, higher output is a warning to non-compliant members (e.g. Kazakhstan and Iraq), who have more to lose against low-cost producers such as Saudi and Russia.
- Upshot being lower crude prices are the lesser evil compared to hard-to-recover loss of share, geo-political pitfalls or inadvertent loss of cartel discipline. Especially considering the overhanging risk of geo-economic shocks.
- Admittedly, OPEC further supply ramp-up is highly contingent. Nonetheless, rising risks of adverse demands shocks suggest softer oil price on balance.
- This squares with underlying anchor for, if not drag on, inflation expectations, in turn supports further (even if not imminent) global easing.
- More durably lower yields could be supported by Fed cuts on well-anchored inflation expectations.

- OPEC Surprises with Upsized Output Bump-Up: In a dovish (bearish for Oil) surprise, OPEC+ announced a 411KBpD addition for May, three times the earlier guidance for a calibrated 138KBpM monthly increment.
- Crude Prices Sink: Markets took heed, sinking crude prices some 7-8% (Brent from $75+ to $sub-$70 | WTI from $72 to $66-67).
- Contrary to OPEC Preferences ...: The price action is ostensibly the opposite of what the OPEC+ would have desired. After all, the OPEC+ is known for its inclination to protect, if not buoy, prices.
- ... & Fiscal Support: In fact, Saudi's implied preference for (Brent) crude price is closer to $90, as backed out of its fiscal breakeven.
- Uncharacteristic At face value, this admittedly appears like diametrically opposed to OPEC+'s usual caution and conservatism in adding crude supplies (to the detriment of price support).
- But Not Misaligned: But it is not a departure from the OPEC+'s fierce defense of self-interest.
- Lesser Evil on Greater Considerations: In fact, lower prices are the lesser evil when accounting for a wider array of risks, including risks to market dominance, geo-political posturing, (intra-cartel) game-theory and overarching geo-economic risks augmenting pure profit motives.

- 1. To Avert Irrevocable Loss of Share: For one, OPEC+ is acutely aware of irrevocably losing even more market share, (to non-OPEC output led by US, Canada, etc.) if it does not increase output.
- Especially on US Energy Dominance Ambitions : A risk accentuated by US' aggressive energy dominance ambitions. US' world-leading, record 13MBpd US production, with sights on an additional 3MBpd is a serious threat to the cartel.
- Price Support Too Expensive: Fact is, price support by OPEC+ benefits the competition at the expense of its market share. In other words, OPEC+ simply cannot afford stubbornly support prices, (with output) curbs at the cost of market share.
- 2. Trump's Pressure to "Cut Oil Price": Second, and the elephant in the room, is Trump's persistent pressures to "cut oil prices". Imaginably, both Saudi and Russia want to oblige, given the geo-political stakes involved.
- 3. Pressuring Iran: What' more, it is in Saudi's geo-political interest to displace Iran's exports share so as to lower US hurdles for "maximum pressures" sanctions on Iran.
- 4. Intra-OPEC Discipline: Finally, increasing output may be a "Prisoner's Dilemma" type warning for non-compliant members (notably Kazakhstan and Iraq). Especially given flouters have more to lose on falling prices than low-cost producers such as Saudi and Russia.
- Opportune Timing of Tariff Turmoil Cover: Notably, the cover of tariff turmoil to up output may partly piggy-back on dominant bearish demand factors, potentially blunting price pain from the supply bump-up.
- Non-Linear & Contingent: To be sure, this a linear projection of May's upsized output restoration is far from guaranteed. Instead, OPEC+ supply response will fluidly respond to evolving demand risks and geo-political contingencies.
- Albeit Tilted to Softer Oil: Nonetheless, softer oil prices* are likely to prevail on balance, as competition for share checks the temptation to fully offset price declines in an environment of adverse demand shocks.
- Dampening Inflation Expectations: Consequently, this squares with inflation expectations being materially dampened as follow-through demand-pull risks from potential tariff price shocks are more than offset.
- & Dovish Monetary Policy Impetus: In turn, tis lowers the hurdle of global central banks to ease further, as they are no longer unduly hobbled by opposing price and income shocks.
- Lower Yields Hastened by OPEC+: The upshot is that OPEC+'s distinct shift from price support to market share, prioritizing geo-political considerations, hastens a path to a more dovish Fed and durably lower UST yields.
