Economic backdrop

Global economic activity has proved surprisingly resilient in the face of the energy supply shock from the Iran conflict, supported by enormous AI capital expenditure, very strong US and Asian financial markets, and a reasonably buoyant US consumer environment.

The US labour market is healthy, with persistent tightness resulting in a sustained boost to wage growth. Consumption has been lacklustre recently, with a squeeze in real incomes from higher energy prices partially offset by tax cuts. The AI capital expenditure boom continues to make a significant contribution to economic growth, supporting elevated business investment and household consumption through rising equity wealth.

Europe's manufacturing sector, already scarred by the energy shock following the Ukraine war, has seen its competitiveness erode further, particularly relative to China. On the positive side, the labour market remains resilient (especially in the South), and Europe is set to benefit from higher fiscal stimulus (particularly in Germany). In Japan, there are early signs that strong wage growth is finally translating into a more sustained recovery in real household consumption. This improving domestic backdrop is being supported by a significant increase in AI infrastructure exports.

China's nominal economic growth has been weak due to ongoing deflation and the consequences of a weak property market. Export activity remains very robust, with solid growth in high-tech products. Greater monetary and fiscal stimulus, together with targeted structural state interventions, has yet to materially improve consumer confidence.

In South Africa, consumer activity is already at weak levels and has been further impacted by increased energy prices and an increase in interest rates. A long-term, sustained lift to economic growth remains structurally constrained by the acute underperformance of transport infrastructure (albeit improving), poor service delivery from weak and revenue-hungry municipalities, entrenched government corruption, organised crime and resultant low business confidence. Disappointingly, the recent moderate increase in fixed investment from very low levels has not yet been accompanied by any meaningful job creation.

In recent years, progress has been made in reforming the economy through Operation Vulindlela and the partnership between government and business leaders targeting key priority areas for reform. Additionally, the Government of National Unity has brought about positive leadership changes in key ministries and a renewed commitment by the government to accelerate initiatives that address the country's structural problems, although progress remains slow.

Fund positioning

Positive contributors in this quarter included our overweight positions in Bytes, Datatec, PPC and Omnia.

Key detractors included our overweight positions in Valterra Platinum, Mondi and Northam Platinum.

We see a reasonably high expected return within our portfolio of local equities and somewhat higher potential our global equity holdings. Within local equities, we have reduced our holdings in Investec, MTN and AECI and increased Prosus/ Naspers, We Buy Cars and Mondi. Currently, the fund has a high exposure to companies with predominantly offshore earnings. The fund is invested in a diverse range of mid-cap stocks.

Bytes Technology Group is a leading UK-based distributor of software, cloud services and cybersecurity solutions to both private- and public-sector customers. The company is well positioned at the intersection of several positive long-term growth trends, including rising IT complexity and sustained demand for software-led technology spending. Its business model benefits from high revenue visibility, driven by the largely recurring nature of customer expenditure, while also generating strong returns on capital and robust cash flow.

Bytes' long-standing track record and established position servicing the UK public sector creates a meaningful avenue for future growth as UK government entities increasingly deploy software to boost productivity amid tight budgets.

Bytes' share price has been very weak recently as earnings growth has temporarily stalled - primarily for two reasons. Firstly, management has accelerated investment in sales capacity and technical talent to position the company to capture market share in the UK's large and fragmented software market. Secondly, Microsoft has changed its distributor incentive model. This has provided our clients with the opportunity to invest in a high-quality business with a strong long-term growth outlook at a low price relative to its prospects.
