

Americans' Views on the Growing Use of Artificial Intelligence in Their Personal Healthcare

Pew Research Center, "60% of Americans Would Be Uncomfortable With Provider Relying on AI in Their Own Health Care", 2023

Two-thirds of U.S. adults say they would not want AI to help determine amount of pain medication they get

% of U.S. adults who say

They would artificial intelligence to help decide the amount of pain medicine they would get after a surgery

31

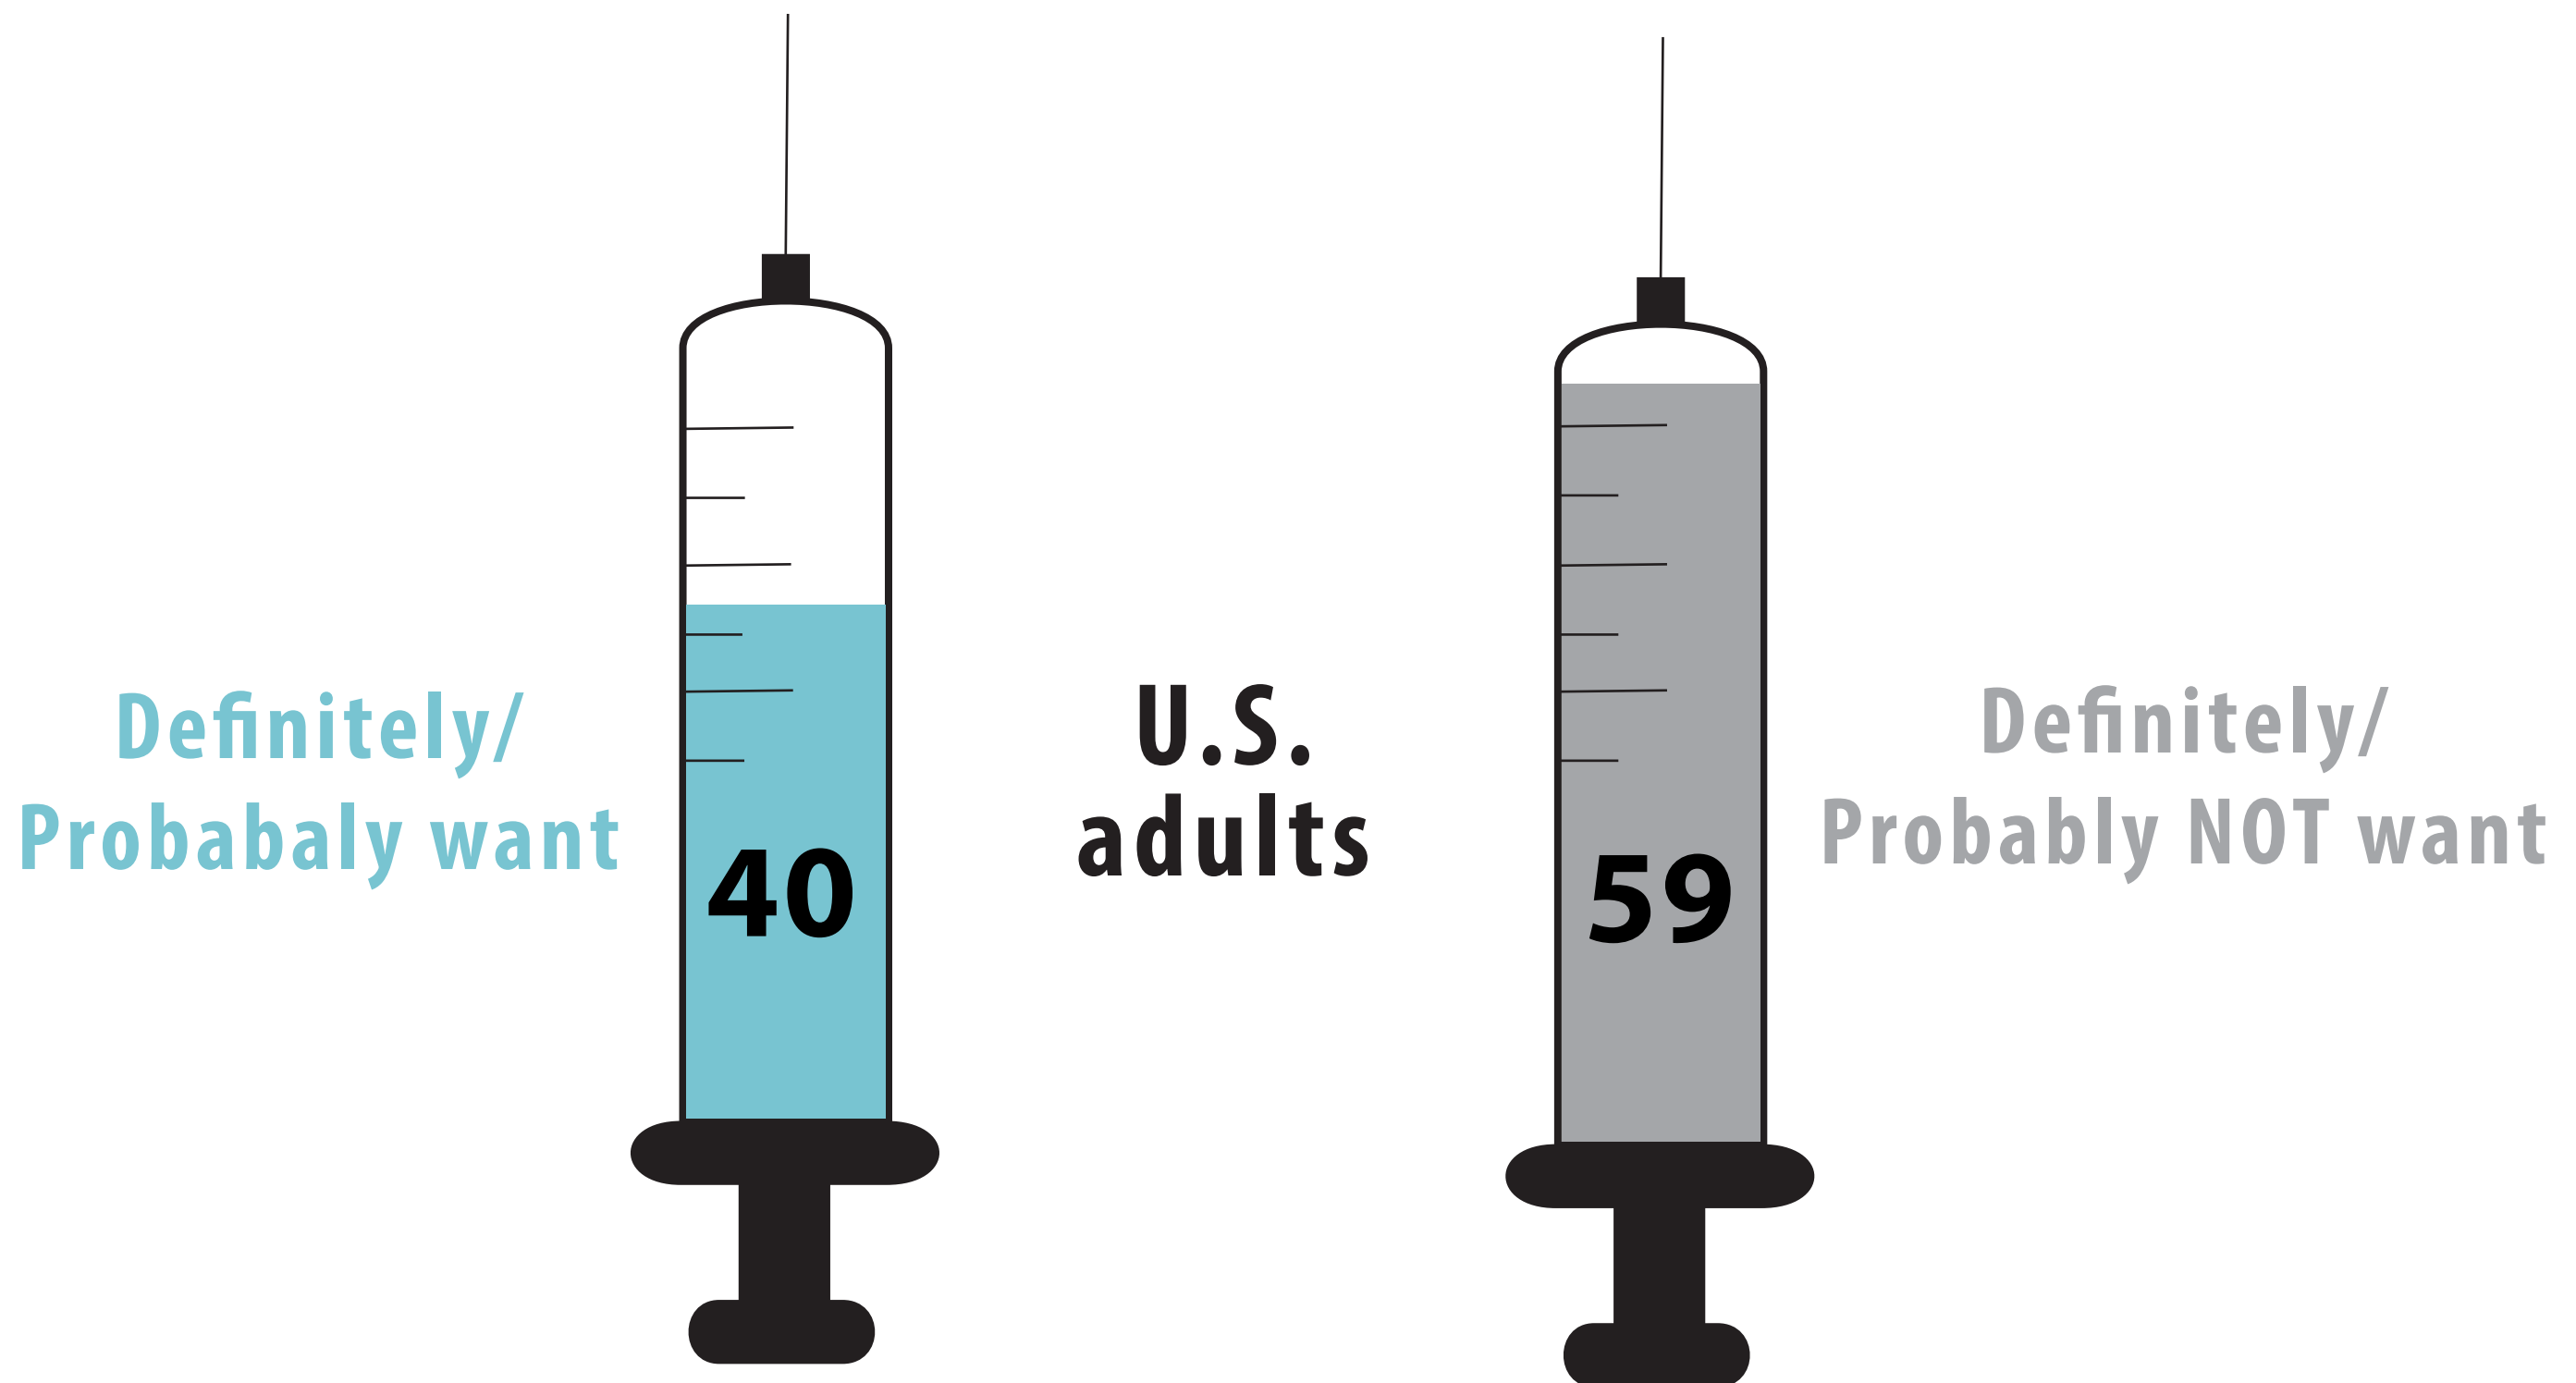

Definitely/
Probably want

67

Definitely/
Probably NOT want

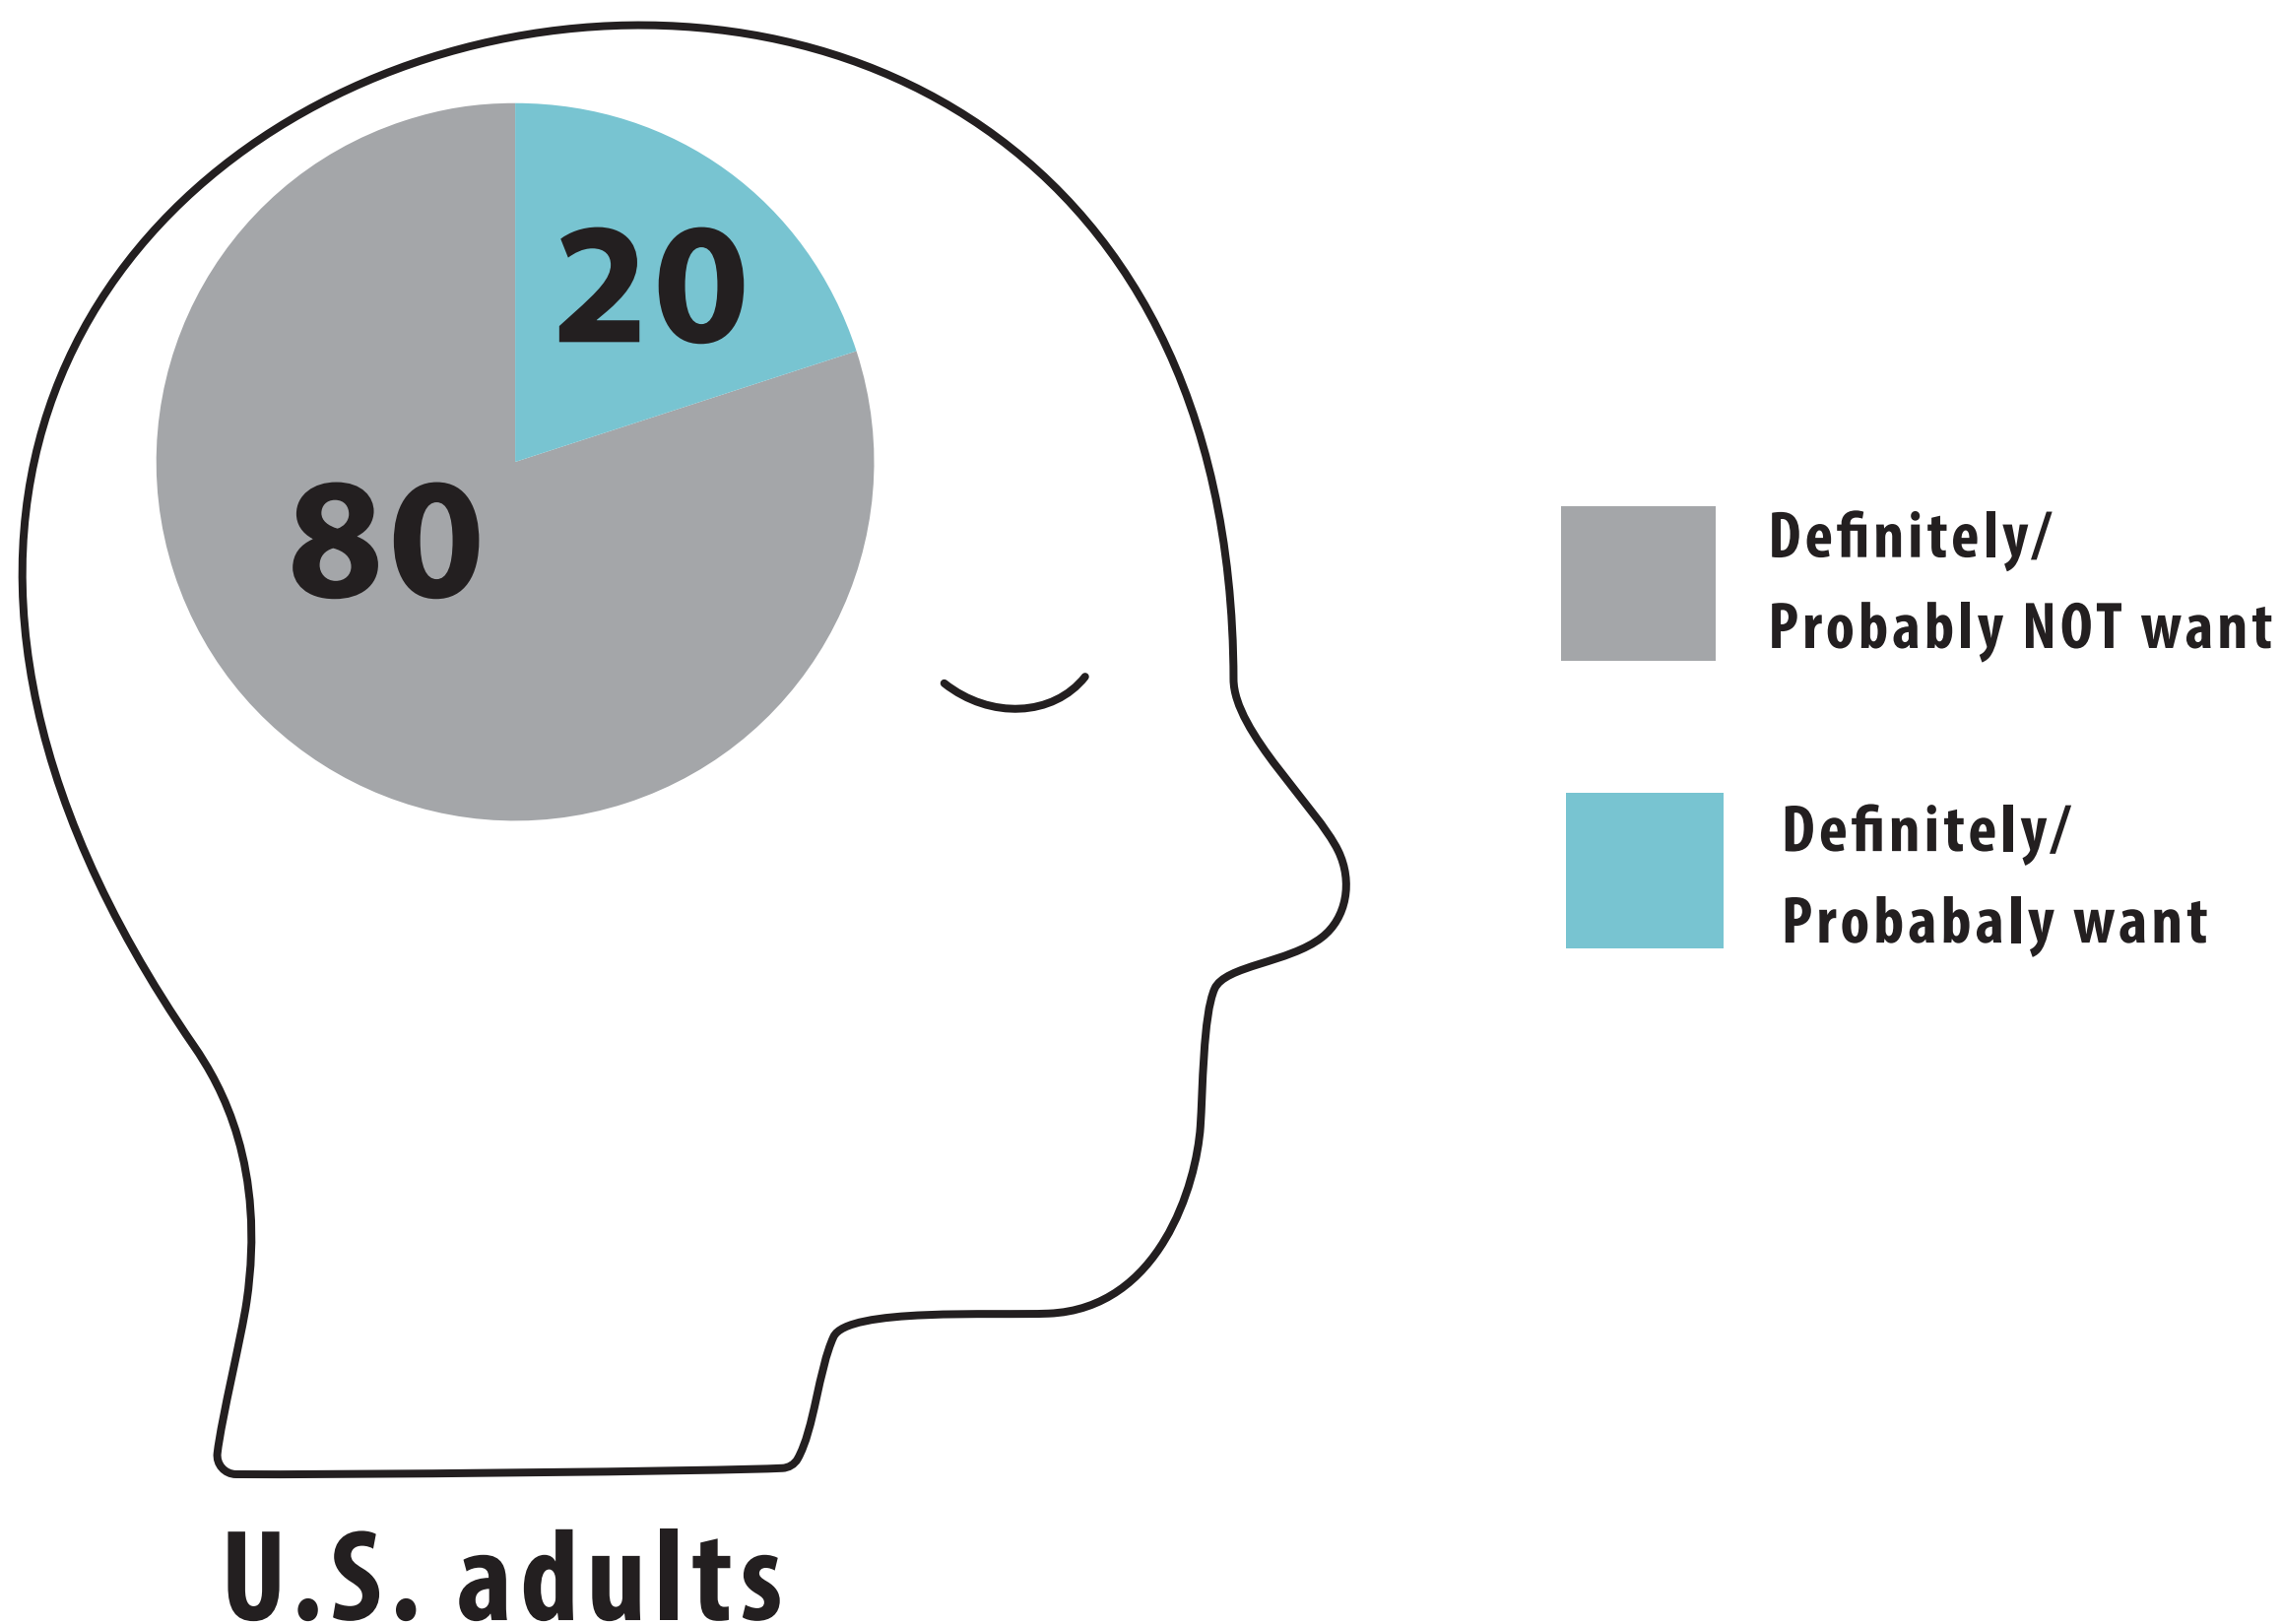

59% of Americans say they would not want AI-powered robots to be used in their own surgery

% of U.S. adults who say they would _ surgical robots with artificial intelligence to be used if they were getting surgery

Large majority of Americans do not want to use an AI chatbot to support their mental health

% of U.S. adults who say they would _ to use an artificial intelligence chatbot if they were seeking mental health support

Among those who see a problem with bias based on race or ethnicity in medicine, 51% think relying more on AI would make the issue better

% who say that if artificial intelligence is used more in health and medicine to do things like diagnose and recommend treatments, the issue of bias and unfair treatment based on a patient's race or ethnicity would...

