Show synopsis

Imagine this!
Caspar, a clown who doesn't want to be a clown anymore. Filled with the heaviness of the world's situation, Caspar's personal life, routines, and tiredness of it all are affecting Caspar's emotional state. Tragically,

When Caspar steps onto the stage, just to do one more last show, feelings and body language are fighting the moments of despair. Once Caspar arrived in front of the House, something changed.
Realizing this is what Caspar was born to do, being a performer, bringing joy and laughter to the audience, and being a lover of humanity.
Despite the everyday struggle and failures, Caspar is starting to find the playfulness in the simplest task. Even squeezing a piece of cheese fills Caspar with great joy and has to share it.
Then, moving a chair is turning into a hilarious physical challenge.
Making a cup of tea will leave the audience with images of "I'll never make a cup of tea the same way ever again".
Following many whimsical moments of problem-solving, Casper circumvents ordinary everyday tasks, which turn into a little disaster on stage, and takes the viewer on this incredible journey of failure.

Happiness can be found even in the darkest of times, if we just remember to turn on the lights.
