

Carrying the Fire

Written visual description for blind and low-vision visitors.

Saturday 7 November 2026 | Emu Point to Binalup (Middleton Beach), Kinjarling (Albany).

About this written visual description

This audio description tells you what Carrying the Fire looks like, from the moment you arrive to the end of the event.

- Part 1 sets the scene: the place, the light, the people and the lanterns. Listen to it or read it before the night.
- Part 2 describes the performance moment by moment. Each moment has a "Listen for" note that links it to a sound you will hear, so you can follow along on the beach.
- All times are approximate.

Part 1: Setting the scene

Welcome

Carrying the Fire is a free night of light on Menang Country, and the final chapter of Albany 2026. An estimated 2,000 people carry handmade lanterns along almost 4 kilometres of beach, from Emu Point to Binalup (Middleton Beach). Together, we create one moving river of light.

The whole artwork asks one question: What do we carry into our shared future?

The place

The performance takes place on the beach that runs between Emu Point and Binalup (Middleton Beach). The beach is long and gently curving, with pale sand. Low dunes covered in coastal plants rise behind the sand. Waves roll in and fold onto the shore.

At the Middleton Beach end is Ellen Cove. Here, a concrete footpath and a boardwalk run along the foreshore and a jetty reaches out into the water. The main stage stands at Ellen Cove, where the finale happens.

The light

The sun sets at about 6:45pm. At 7pm the sky still holds soft twilight, pale near the horizon and blue above. Over the next 37 minutes it deepens to dark blue and then to night. As the sky darkens, the lanterns grow brighter against it.

For visitors with low vision, the lanterns appear as points and lines of light against the dark beach and sky.

The people

- Lantern Leaders: Around 150 trained volunteers, standing about every 30 metres along the beach. They help to shape the artwork and guide everyone through it.
- Lantern Bearers: about 2,000 community members, each carrying a handmade lantern lit by a phone torch. An app switches every light on and off, right on cue.
- On stage at the finale: Fire performers, a Menang girl named Djorna and her grandmother, Elders, the Mayor, Whadjuk representatives and State Government representatives.

The lanterns

Every lantern is made by hand, in kitchens, classrooms, sheds and workshops across the Great Southern. The designs draw on five symbols of Menang Country, chosen with community and Elders.

With your lantern, you carry the fire. You carry your connection to this place and your hopes for our future. Explore how you can carry the fire through Country, into our homes, across seas, into spirit and beyond time.

Inspired by the people, animals and plants of this place, these symbols are invitations for contemplation, learning and reflection.

Through Country | Biyarra / Banksia

A symbol of resilience, the biyarra / banksia was traditionally used by Noongar people to carry fire from camp to camp. The embers of the burning banksia nut were kept alive under a booka, a kangaroo skin cloak, and sustained life through the movements of the seasons.

The biyarra / banksia lantern recognises the first way of carrying the fire through Country. When we light our biyarra lantern, we carry the fire of knowledge and life into our future.

Reflection question: How do you care for Country and the natural world?

Into Our Homes | kwornt / koornt

The kwornt / koornt is a traditional Noongar shelter, created with natural materials, shifting with the changing seasons. All of us, no matter where we come from, use materials from the natural world to build our homes, creating warmth and shelter and a place for loved ones to gather together.

By creating the kwornt lantern, we recognise the first forms of shelter on this Country and all the forms of home that have been created since.

Reflective question: What creates a sense of home?

Across Seas | Sea Star

A symbol of regeneration, the sea star can regrow lost and broken limbs as long as part of the central disc remains intact. By creating the sea star lantern, we see our own capacity to regenerate, regrow and expand. When we light our sea star lantern, we see reflections of the skies and the oceans, showing us how vast our world can be.

Reflection question: What keeps you strong when things change?

Into Spirit | Moodjar / Christmas Tree

The moodjar tree, also known as the Western Australia Christmas Tree, is a plant native to South-West Western Australia that blooms with vibrant orange flowers at the end of the year. The moodjar tree is very special for Noongar people. Menang Noongar people believe it is where spirits rest on their journey to Kuranup – the sacred place where the spirits of their people return to the Dreaming.

By carrying the moodjar, we honour the special spiritual connection that exists between Menang people and the Country. We also remember those who have gone before us, lighting the way forward. We are all moving through the cycles of life and death, carrying the fire to light the way.

Reflective question: Who are you remembering as you carry your lantern?

Beyond Time | Tidelines

Tidelines capture a moment in time, offering pathways into past, present and future. As we walk the shorelines, we see rhythms of arrivals and departures, moments of time marked in the sand and then washed away.

Carried by the tide, water holds the memories of our many histories, pasts, and possibilities for the future.

Reflection question: Can your lantern capture a special moment in your life?

You can hold a lantern design in your own hands.

Where to experience it

- Zone A at Ellen Cove and Middleton Beach is our most accessible zone. It has footpaths, beach matting and extra accessible (ACROD) parking bays for ACROD permit holders next to the Albany Surf Life Saving Club.
- When you register, select "smooth path". We will direct you to Zone A and the concrete path along the Ellen Cove foreshore.
- A short stretch of beach matting will sit on the sand in front of the Albany Surf Life Saving Club.
- Guide dogs and assistance animals are welcome
- Toilets are at the Albany Surf Life Saving Club.
- From 4pm, Ellen Cove and Firth Street Park at Emu Point have food, a live DJ and lawn games. Ellen Cove also has market stalls. These areas can be busy, with queues, music and the smell of cooking.
- From 4pm to 6:30pm, Albany Golf Course has a free sausage sizzle or free ice cream, one per person, while stocks last. Pick up a ticket from our info marquee to redeem at your vendor of choice.
- A shuttle bus runs from the Albany Leisure and Aquatic Centre to Emu Point (Zone E) and Albany Golf Course (Zones C and D). Overflow parking is at Eyre Park, and at the southern end of Albany Golf Course from Wollaston Road.
- Spring nights on the coast are cold and windy. Wear warm clothes and good walking shoes.

Key times

Part 2: The performance, moment by moment

The performance lasts about 37 minutes. It moves from twilight into night, and from stillness into a river of moving light.

1. Acknowledgement of Country. At 7pm.

The beach is still. Lantern Leaders and Lantern Bearers stand quietly in their groups along the sand and the paths, their lanterns dark. Above the water, the sky holds the last soft light of the day, pale at the horizon and blue above.

Listen for: an Acknowledgement of Country.

2. The arrival of fire. About 7:03pm.

In front of the crowd, the beach is open and empty: a wide band of pale sand running down to the water's edge. Thousands of people stand along the dunes and paths, looking out to the ocean. Waves roll in and break in long white lines.

Listen for: music that builds slowly, deep and ancient, carrying the strength of the Porongurup.

3. The first lights

Lantern Leaders walk out onto the sand and take their places along the beach, one every 30 metres. They stand still. Then a single light glows. Then another. A few more. Then many, scattered along the coast.

Listen for: airy, misty, twinkling sounds with moments of strength.

4. The Moodjar Flower dance. About 3 minutes.

The Lantern Leaders dance the Moodjar Flower. Each leader moves in their own time, and together they move as one long line along the coast. Their dance reflects the life cycles of plants and growth, and flows like the ocean moving in and out. Their lights pulse, slow and steady, one answering another down the beach like signal lights calling across the dark. One by one the pulsing settles, until every Lantern Leader's light glows steady.

Listen for: a calling: campfires, smoke, food cooking in light rain, and the presence of Ancestors and spirits.

5. The Lantern Bearers arrive. About 1 minute.

Guided by the Lantern Leaders, thousands of Lantern Bearers walk down onto the sand and make their way to the water's edge. They form one long line along the shoreline, facing the ocean. Lanterns blink on in scattered patches, here, then there, until a line of light runs along the edge of the sea.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: walk with your group to the shoreline and face the ocean.

6. Preparing the fire. About 10 seconds.

The line is still. Every Lantern Bearer holds their lantern straight out in front with two hands, arms reaching towards the sea. The line of light holds steady.

Listen for: deep sounds from the Porongurup, a calling from the granite.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: hold your lantern straight out with two hands, ready to lift.

7. Lighting up. About 7:11pm.

The sky deepens to blue. Every lantern on the beach glows at once: one unbroken ribbon of light, tracing the coast.

Listen for: the sound falling away into quiet.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: keep holding your lantern out in front and wait.

8. The fire builds. About 3 minutes.

Together, the Lantern Bearers lift their lanterns quickly towards the sky, then lower them slowly. Up, and down. Six times. Along the whole coast, the ribbon of light rises and falls together.

Then the Bearers turn slowly on the spot, two or three times, their lanterns sweeping circles of light, until they stand with their backs to the ocean, facing the dunes. The lifts and turns repeat three times. On the second set of turns, every lantern on the beach pulses six times.

Listen for: a deep granite boom on the first lifts, fire sounds and a rising note on the first turns, a sweeping melody on the second turns, and the music at its peak on the third lifts.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: lift fast on 1, lower slowly on 2, 3, 4, six times. Turn slowly two or three times, finishing with your back to the ocean. Repeat the whole sequence three times. Your Lantern Leader sets the timing.

9. Concentration of intent. About 3 minutes.

The long line breaks and reforms. Following the Lantern Leaders, the Bearers move across the sand to draw shapes for the drone filming from above: long winding lines like tendrils, circles of light that pulse brighter and softer, folding lines and tight clusters that glow like signal fires along the coast. Then a wave of light pulses down the length of the beach and scatters into sparkling, random patterns.

Listen for: a piano melody growing into a full wall of sound, then drums and rhythm arriving with the wave of light.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: follow your Lantern Leader across the sand.

10. The procession of light. About 7 minutes.

The river of light begins to move. Half the Lantern Leaders guide thousands of Bearers along the beach towards Binalup (Middleton Beach). The other half stay in place, marking the way. Every 200 metres, a small group of Lantern Leaders dances the Moodjar Flower again. For a moment, the Bearers' lanterns go dark, and only the Moodjar Flower groups pulse along the shore. Then the Bearers' lights spark back on, here and there, until the river glows again.

Listen for: rhythm that rises and falls, and voices calling everyone towards Binalup.

Your part as a Lantern Bearer: walk with your group at a comfortable pace and follow your Lantern Leader.

11. Embers. About 3 minutes.

The long column of light keeps moving along the coast. Its glow is warm and steady, shifting gently in patterns that follow the music.

Listen for: the strong beat dropping away, leaving soft, atmospheric sound.

12. Fire travels through the Six Seasons: the Songline of Djorna. About 11 minutes.

Attention turns to the main stage at Ellen Cove. Many Lantern Bearers gather around it, a crowd of glowing lanterns surrounding the stage. On stage, fire performers create pictures with flame: shapes of Kwornt, Biyarra, tidelines, Sea Star and Moodjar Flower. At the heart of the story are a Menang girl, Djorna, and her grandmother, connecting past and future.

Twice, as the music swells to a high point, the lanterns on the beaches nearest the stage go dark, and the fire on stage stands out against the dark.

Listen for: a strong change in the music, like the start of a new chapter.

13. The handover of the Biyarra. About 2 minutes

Djorna lights a campfire on stage. Flames rise. She lifts the Biyarra, a sculpture made to carry fire. The Lantern Leaders spread out from the stage in long lines, like tendrils reaching across the sand. Light flows down each line, lantern after lantern, travelling outward from the stage.

Along these glowing lines, Elders, the Mayor and a State Government representative walk to the stage, through an honour guard of Moodjar Flowers. The beaches near the stage are dark now. The Lantern Leaders' lights glow on, steady and bright.

Listen for: calm, reflective music that holds the question: what do we carry into our shared future?

14. The departure of the Biyarra. About 1 minute

The Mayor and Menang representatives stay on stage, gathered around the campfire. Whadjuk and State Government representatives carry the lit Biyarra off the stage, walking along the line of Moodjar Flower Lantern Leaders. Further down the beach, the groups of Lantern Leaders go dark. A final line of leaders lights the path, then their lights go out, one by one.

At the jetty, one cluster of Moodjar Flower lanterns glows on: an enduring signal fire to the State.

Listen for: flickering fire sounds as the music dissolves into the crackle of flame.

15. The show ends. About 7:37pm

Across the beach, the lanterns glow again. They stay lit for up to 45 minutes, lighting the way as thousands of people make their way along the sand, back to their cars and on to the after party.

Listen for: the soundtrack ending, leaving the sound of the sea and the crowd.

Tonight, we carry the fire forward, together.
