Where roads stop, our work begins

Around 900 million people in the Global South have no road connections. This makes it difficult for them to access drinking water, food, medicine and education. With our small aircraft, we can break through such isolation and reach people in need – irrespective of their background, religion or ethnicity.

We bring help to places others cannot get to – making sustainable development possible everywhere.

Enabling access and opening up prospects

We combine our Christian identity with practical action: we fly essential goods and services into isolated regions of the world. Working together with over 1,500 partners, we enable people to access their basic needs and achieve sustainable development.

Health and hygiene

We provide medical care by transporting personnel and materials and by carrying out rescue flights to hospitals. We enable access to clean drinking water and sanitation facilities in order to combat diseases like typhoid and cholera.

Education and skills development

Our flights support the establishment of schools and training centres. We promote vocational development by transporting specialists and trainers to build up local skills and develop communities sustainably.

Nutrition and income

We enable local producers to access markets in built-up areas and we help supply food to vulnerable groups. Together with partners, we also promote agricultural production through training and the provision of resources.

Faith and hope

Together with local parishes and churches, we strengthen communities spiritually and socially in order to bring about positive changes. We facilitate pastoral and spiritual care, as well as reconciliation in conflict regions, through mediation and support.

Disaster relief

When disasters happen, we act quickly to help people in need. We set up airlifts for relief supplies and medical teams. In cooperation with local and international partners, we coordinate the distribution of essential goods.
