

Founder story and spokespeople

For press inquiries, contact press@makevisible.com.

- Founder story

Visible was co-founded by Harry Leeming, a London-based engineer who previously worked in Formula 1 and in product at Moneybox.

In September 2020, Harry, then 29 and fit and healthy, caught what seemed to be a mild case of COVID-19. Over the following weeks he developed worsening nausea, dizziness, severe heart palpitations and chest pain. His tests came back normal, and his symptoms were put down to anxiety or deconditioning.

With few answers from the healthcare system, Harry began trying to make sense of his symptoms himself. He turned to wearables to track what was happening in his body, but found they were built for fitness, where doing more is seen as progress. For people with energy-limiting conditions like Long Covid and ME/CFS, doing too much can make symptoms worse. What Harry needed was a way to understand his limits, not push past them.

That experience led Harry to found Visible.

- Spokespeople

Harry Leeming Co-founder

Former Formula 1 mechanical engineer who founded Visible after developing Long Covid in 2020. Previously worked in product at Moneybox.

Luke Martin-Fuller Co-founder

Former lawyer turned product leader. Trained at Linklaters and later built technology products there and at Moneybox.

Janna Gordon Director of Clinical Affairs and Research

Clinical psychologist and health researcher with a background in behavioral medicine, health outcomes research, chronic illness and health disparities.

Oonagh Cousins Brand Lead

Former Great Britain rower, pre-selected for the Tokyo Olympics before retiring after developing Long Covid and ME/CFS. Patient advocate who has spoken widely in the national media about the need for better care and research.