

Adventist Culture, Adventist Choices

Findings

The percentage of respondents' choice of school, by union, n = 839.

- If a parents' network of friends is largely Adventist, they are twice as likely to send their child to an Adventist school (64.6%) versus a non-Adventist school (33.1%). Community matters!
- A parent who has attended some or all of K-12 in an Adventist school is more likely to enroll their own child in an Adventist school (61.3%) than those who has no previous experience with Adventist education in their prior context (51.5%)
- Low Adventist culture = public school
Med Adventist culture = Adventist school
High Adventist culture = homeschool
- Income makes the biggest difference in school choice when one compares those in the highest and lowest tiers of income, but not as noticeable in the middle groups.