The U.K.'s highest residence—lording some 700 feet over London's River Thames—has hit the market with views that extend for 40 miles on a clear day.

Located in Canary Wharf, the city's financial hub, Landmark Pinnacle is a 764-foot-tall skyscraper that's the tallest residential building in Western Europe.

The development spans 75 floors and this three-bedroom penthouse, on the market for £7 million (US$9.2 million), is on the 74th floor along with three other units that share the tallest accolade.

The building's communal Sky Terrace, complete with living walls and 13,000 plants, occupies the floor above.

The £7 million apartment, which the developers have called the Pinnacle Penthouse, spans 3,122 square feet and is lined with floor-to-ceiling windows that take in the view across the city and some of its most recognizable landmarks.

The penthouse has been designed with curved architectural lines to reflect the winding route of the River Thames below, according to a news release from developer Chalegrove Properties.

The unit is asking £7 million.

It features an open layout, three bedrooms, European oak flooring, Calacatta gold marble-finish tiled floors and a custom-designed kitchen with Caesarstone quartz worktops.

A second, slightly smaller 74th-floor penthouse also hit the market at the end of September. Asking $5.5 million, the Landmark Penthouse, as it's called, spans 2,145 square feet and has three bedrooms.

Both homes are "trophy assets," and offer the chance to "own a home at the very top of Britain's residential skyline," Rami Atallah, director at Chalegrove Properties, said in the release.

The development has five floors of amenity spaces that include the highest residents' gym in the U.K., a yoga and pilates studio, private bars and dining rooms, a private cinema, a children's play garden, and a library and lounge.
